"Taste the Terror"

The Valle de Guadalupe region of Baja California is a 14-mile pastoral paradise, with patchworks of vineyards, orchards and organic gardens, not to mention a unique history and lively culture only found in Baja. After Mexico was colonized by the Spaniards, settlers from other European countries such as Italy and Russia arrived with their own grape varieties and planted them in the rich soil of the Valle de Guadalupe. Valle de Guadalupe is actually one of the oldest grape growing regions in the Americas, with roots in the 1700s. Over the past several decades, the region has experienced an explosion of growth, transforming into a gastronomy haven. Baja California's Valle de Guadalupe now produces nearly 90% of all the wine that comes from Mexico and boasts over 100 distinct vineyards & 150 wineries – some featuring architecturally striking wineries, quaint tasting rooms and delicious food."

MEDITERRANEAN-LIKE CLIMATE Set back far enough from the coast to experience hot, dry days, the region is still close enough to the water to get a cool ocean breeze at night, creating a Mediterranean-like climate favorable for growing grapes. While some moisture does travel through this nighttime ocean breeze, the lack of substantial rainfall makes the region much dryer than other wine countries. As a result, many Baja vineyards rely upon irrigation to keep the grapevines well-watered. The water drawn from wells underground happens to be extremely high in salinity, giving the Valle de Guadalupe wines a very slight hint of saltiness. REGIONAL VARIETIES- Some of the popular varieties of wine that can be found in the valley include Chenin Blanc, Colombard, Sauvignon Blanc, Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon, Tempranillo, Zinfandel, Malbec, Nebbiolo and Barbera. With the wide range of wines produced in this region there really is something for every taste.
